

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to methods and compositions for enhancing cardiac function in mammalian hearts by inserting transgenes that increase beta-adrenergic responsiveness within the myocardium. The present invention can thus be used in the treatment of heart disease, especially congestive heart failure.